

A Song/Poem for Infants

Note for teachers: The events of the Holocaust are too horrific to describe to small children but on 27 January they can share in the spirit of the occasion if you talk together about how everyone could do something, however small to make our world a safer and fairer place for everyone. This is important because the seeds of discrimination, prejudice and unfairness from which hatred and genocide grow are often sown when children are young. These simple verses encourage children to listen to the Untold Stories which others want to share and to send a positive message to adults telling them how children think they ought to behave. This poem should be read to the tune of Hickory Dickory Dock.

We've Untold Stories to share

So people will be aware

That hate is wrong

But love is strong

We've Untold Stories to Share.

You've Untold Stories to hear,

From people far and near.

That's quite a range

Of tale exchange!

You've Untold Stories to hear.

You've Untold Stories to read,

Of hatred, unfairness and greed.

But this can change

When we arrange
To listen and help those in need.

With Untold Stories to tell

Let everyone listen well

Let friendship grow

Wherever you go

With Untold Stories to tell.
